

video transcript

creating prosperity: the business of progress

human energy[®]

Chevron is a business. We make decisions from a unique business perspective.

We've learned from experience that our best work happens when the communities we work with are healthy and thriving.

It's just smart business to encourage growth within the communities.

Our approach starts with supplying the world's need for reliable, affordable energy.

Energy that helps people grow, thrive and prosper.

But it goes beyond energy.

In communities where we work, we collaborate with local governments and organizations to find opportunities to succeed.

For them and for us.

Then we bring people, resources and technology together to make it happen.

We've invested billions to help unlock human potential around the world.

We call it The Business of Progress.

Sometimes the opportunities are economic; like setting up programs to develop local businesses.

Some join our team as supplier-partners. Learning skills and safety standards.

We foster relationships with everyone from big corporations to small companies. And they take on new clients too, boosting local employment and spending, improving livelihoods.

Sometimes the opportunities are social. Like education. We invest tens of millions in it each year.

Partnerships with organizations like Project Lead the Way and the Fab Foundation helps students learn science, technology, engineering and math.

We also promote public health, because our business relies on healthy communities.

Partnering with organizations like PACT, Born Free Africa and The Global Fund has helped fight devastating diseases, particularly HIV and AIDS.

In Nigeria, we've not had a mother-to-child transmission of HIV among our employees since 2001. That's great news for everyone.

And we work to protect the environment...

...embracing ideas and technology that can reduce impact:

like water recycling to conserve resources in California.

Carbon capture to cut emissions in Australia.

Plant and animal monitoring to protect natural habitats.

Our goal is to build lasting relationships with the communities where we work—to create prosperity so that we can succeed together for a long time to come.

That's what we call the Business of Progress.