day in the life: geoscientist

Bangladesh is a beautiful country. I love to live here – I've grown up here.

Dhaka is the capital city of Bangladesh with 400 years of history. Around 20 years ago, there was not much electricity, not much industries around the city. But nowadays, there are lots of industries.

This is a quite busy city.

My name is Sirajum Munira and I'm a geoscientist working at Chevron in Bangladesh.

As a geoscientist at Chevron, my work is to evaluate undiscovered resources here as well as selecting the zones of the reserves.

We know to fulfill our global energy demand, we need petroleum resources. That's why I'm interested in extracting and developing and producing more natural petroleum resources.

I feel proud to be a geoscientist in this industry. I realize that my responsibility and my hard work can bring success for this country.
